Tara Wall is a writer, blogger and speaker of all things life, small business and family.

Married for eighteen years to her husband Tim, Tara spent most of that time running the HR department, handling advertising and community events and balancing Quickbooks for their growing auto body shop while raising their seven children.

Once they got their business established and kids settled in to school, Tara launched her own blogging website, ConsiderTheFields.com, to share so many of the things she had learned both behind the scenes and on the front lines in the community and at home.

She runs the Children's Ministry Program for Blue Ridge Gospel Tabernacle in Rocky Mount, Virginia, and has donated countless hours to minister to young women at Blue Ridge Bible College in both counseling and teaching.

She has written several pieces to advocate for foster care and adoption and has been featured in Discover Smith Mountain Lake Magazine.

She was a member of Professional Women's Resources at Smith Mountain Lake for over ten years, speaking about the challenges and joys of being self-employed as well as balancing priorities of work and family.

Her heart is to help other people face difficult challenges in life with an overcoming attitude. She is currently establishing a non-profit to help women overcome addiction in a home setting that keeps the family unit together.

She loves to travel with her husband (and sometimes the kids!) and together share what they have learned in their crazy journey together this far.
